PUTNAM BOOKS AND AUTHORS

It is one of the amazing things about this old universe of ours that there is a use for everything. Now most of us are wrong about books. They aren't useless. Oh, no! They do fill a pressing need, like putty, filling up gaps—in bookcases.

Ode to a Saintly Man in a clerical vest, seen reading "The Bad Man" on the "L." In which his suppressed desires are met by a vicarious vicar. There was an exemplary vicar. Craving thrills, excitement and "licker," who read the madman Charles Tomlin's novel "Bad Man," which quite saved this vicarious vicar.

We have read limericks limericker, but for thrills, excitement and "licker," the "Bad Man" the trick; brings the old kick hi-hic! So at tests this vicarious vicar.

Dear R. C. A.: Why not philately and philatelic for Phyle's 18,000 Words Often Mispronounced?

This is the first time that any of the many editions of Phyle's "18,000 Words Often Mispronounced" have been caught tripping—if you consider this tripping. It almost invariably answers the searcher's troubled about some puzzling word. The large circulation of this useful book is an eloquent answer to those who accuse Americans of self-satisfaction and provincialism.

The Bible Repaved Has it ever occurred to you that the routine methods of both secular and Sunday schools have destroyed the charm of the classics and the Bible? Many a "Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch" follows his fascinating "Art of Writing" with "The Art of Reading." In "The Art of Reading" are many delightfully clarifying talks on books and some ingenious and never irreverent suggestions for the rearrangement and republishing of the Bible. You will find these beginning on Page 178.

To Meade Minnegerode, author of The Big Year: Thanks, Meade, old chap, the reward's yours. You've found it—our lost youth! And returned it unaltered, undented, glowing fair, in that Big Year of yours. And I'll bet you your royalties you've turned the same trick for thousands, no matter what their trait or college, even if they never saw the inside of one. Yours in the bonds of that recaptured youth.

You cannot pass this by. We were talking recently with an intelligent and Boston publisher about the strange obsession of the public, their prejudice against so-called "war books." It must pass, may, already passing. How can any big-canvas novel, for instance, leave so far-reaching an event quite out of its scheme? It cannot be whitewashed out of the background. We defy any man or woman of average intelligence to idly toss down Wooden Crosses. There are a few flaws in the translation, but they are trifling, after all. It has not the profoundest depth—and it is profound—Wooden Crosses has the intensity of the finer things that endure. Politically the French censor was right in suppressing it, at the time. For the fame of its young author, Roland Dorgeles, it was after all, perhaps, a fortunate suppression. We can come at it now with a better slant, a less distorted perspective. The publishers of today have big presses to which often come some mediocre grist. Here is prime golden wheat from the most fertile field ever ploughed by the iron share of stern circumstance and watered by man's lifeblood. No, No—you cannot pass by.

Sweetpea Day at Flower Show Draws Out Suburbanites

Commuers Divided Between Frank Admiration and Jealousy Over Exhibits of Prize-Winning Plants

It was sweetpea day at the Flower Show yesterday, and the hope which springs eternal in the commuiter's breast renewed itself at the sight of the prize winning pink and lavender beauties.

Visitors at the Grand Central Palace divided themselves immediately into two classes, those who were frankly admiring and those who were jealous. The latter emotion had not been much stirred by the exhibits of American Beauty roses or cabbage carnations earlier in the week, for equal no private grower can hope to equal the masterpieces of the famous growers of these flowers, but everybody thinks that he can raise sweetpeas. So the backyard experts crowded round the exhibits and bombarded the attendants with technical questions.

Mrs. W. R. Cross, of Morristown, N. J., took first prize for one hundred sweetpeas. Mrs. Ridley Watts won first prize for table decorations and Mrs. H. McK. Twombly second.

First prizes for other flowers were won by Thomas Aitchison, Mrs. Ridley Watts and Mrs. Payne Whitney. Roses drew more prizes, divided as usual among F. B. Pierson, A. N. Pierson and the Duckham Pierson Company.

General Pershing has accepted an invitation to attend the show this afternoon, accompanied by his staff.

Sunday will be motion picture day in the Bellevue Tea Garden, with several well known stars as guests, including Dorothy Gish, Norma Talmadge, Constance Binney, Alice Brady, Marion Davies and Richard Barthelmess.

Miss Mary Cameron was in charge of the waitresses yesterday, assisted by Sheila Byrne, Hazel Archbold, Georgia Wells, Ruth Tyson, Melissa Yallie, Katherine Kent, Molly Cogswell and Mrs. Robert Stafford. The flower girls were Adele Reynal, Helen Rice, Eleanor Pettinos, Caro Shaw, Polly McCall and Ruth Baldwin.
